

"Farmed Salmon Exposed" online, plus positive reviews from international media

Written by Damien Gillis

Damien Gillis' new documentary, "Farmed Salmon Exposed: The Global Reach of the Norwegian Salmon Farming Industry" is now available online here in its entirety. Click here to view it.

The film has been screened over 40 times in 9 countries around the world since this past November, when it was launched during the Pure Salmon Campaign's Global Week of Action on salmon farms. One of these screenings, at the recent global Seafood Choices Summit in Paris, caught the attention of ABC TV's award-winning food critic, Steve Dolinsky (<http://tinyurl.com/y8wfyl> - scroll down to Day 2) and received this positive review by The Atlantic Monthly's Barry Estabrook (<http://tinyurl.com/y9vzxi>):

"I've visited salmon farms, read scientific articles, and interviewed the multi-billion-dollar industry's advocates and detractors, but never have I encountered anything as graphic as the film Farmed Salmon Exposed by Canadian filmmaker Damien Gillis...The film in its entirety is positively gut-wrenching...Industry representatives said that the movie was one-sided...Farmed Salmon Exposed is one-sided. It's the side of the industry the multi-national corporations don't want us to see." - The Atlantic

80% of salmon farms in Chile - once the number two producer in the world - now sit abandoned in the wake of a devastating attack by the deadly Infectious Salmon Anemia Virus